Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Review of McClellan s Campaigns, as Commander of the Army of the Potomac To The Editor of the Boston Courier: The dismissal of Major-General George B. McClellan from the command of the Army of the Potomac, on the seventh day of November, 1862, closed a very important chapter in the history of the present war. The future historian, only, will be enabled to gather up all the facts of this remarkable period; but the logic of events - the brief, yet impressive lessons from experience - the testimony of General McClellan, recently given before the McDowell Court-Martial - the letters and orders made public in the investigation - the statement of Prince de Joinville, and evidences from various other sources, carefully examined and compared, will throw much light upon matters which have not been fully understood by the people, and relieve many mistakes of judgment regarding the character, acts, and military ability of the late Commander of the Army of the Potomac. The first period in this history is the season of inactivity, as it has been called, covering The Fall And Winter Of 1861 And 1862. General McClellan, upon the recommendation of General Scott, was called by the President to the command of the Army of the Department of Washington, July 25th, 1861, four days after the battle of Bull Run; and, upon the withdrawal of General Scott from active service on the first day of November, he was appointed Commander of the Armies of the United States. From the time he took command of the Army of the Department of Washington until March, no important movement was made by that portion of the...
