Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Cyr Graded Art Readers, Vol. 2 The second book of the art series continues the study begun in the Advanced First Reader, and presents copies of paintings -as the subjects for the children s lessons. The artist, like the poet, perceives a delicate meaning in the humblest scenes which may surround him. The child with his Vivid imagination is susceptible to these impressions, and can soon learn to recognize truth and beauty as presented to him in pictures. Nature and life are filled with lessons which the soul is slow to receive. The artist sees the message and puts it on canvas, thus revealing it to duller eyes and awakening a responsive love of beauty. Corot felt the mystical influence of the early dawn when the soft lights creep through the pale mists. Israels, Geoffrey, and Meyer von Bremen love the child at work or at play, and recognize the beauty of its unfolding soul. Millet and Breton represent what is noblest and most pathetic in peasant life; and so on each artist has...
