India and China in the Colonial World

By Madhavi Thampi (ed.)

Social Science Press and Orient BlackSwan, New Delhi, India, 2005. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. Dust Jacket Condition: New. First Edition. THIS VOLUME brings together thirteen essays by eminent Indian and Chinese scholars as well as young researchers who look at the multi-dimensional interactions which took place between the two countries during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. This interaction was a complex one. It was of many kinds and took place at various levels, and therefore cannot be reduced to any simple understanding either of widespread anti-colonial solidarity or political hostility or indifference. It is possible to see in these interactions seeds of future misunderstandings as well as a basis for common aspirations founded on a sense of shared anti-imperialism and the rediscovery of each others cultures. This volume looks at some of the problems that have confronted the relations between India and China as new states and in doing so, challenges stereotyped images of this relationship. The major areas of the India-China relationship covered in this book relate to trade, migratory communities, cultural interaction, and the links between the political struggles in the two countries. It also includes some aspects of the situation during and after the Second World...
