In his first year, sales resulting from only two visits of a mediocre salesman ran over $25,000. Ten years later they were bumping the $200,000 mark. Then they slid down to one hundred sixty thousand--one hundred twenty thousand--ninety thousand. In the first two years of decline the manufacturer contented himself with re-routing the salesman so that he made four visits instead of three. In the final end of the slump--the skid--a sampling crew working among consumers spent sixteen weeks in that city--and still the skid continued. Expert motorists tell us of several ways to stop a skid. One is to turn the...
